HOW TO WRITE A NOVEL.
An Example of How a Thrilling Romance Can Be Turned Out.
If we had time we could write novels—lots of novels. They might not be very novel novels, and they might not be bumping down the front doorsteps of time, but they would be a great relief to us. The truth is, there are whole swarms of novels buzzing around in our inner consciousness, poking at the edges in their eagerness to get out. But there is no use thinking about it; we haven't time. It occurs to us, however, that we may make ourselves useful to somebody else.

There seems to be plenty of ambitious young persons who have all the time there is and who would like to write novels, they tell us, if they only knew how to start out. Now, possibly we can help where they are weakest. Almost every day we see some young man or woman, sitting at a desk, looking at a blank sheet of paper, and wondering how to start. Only yesterday we were coming down Thirtieth street and—
Well, a novel might start out like this, for instance:
The rich, full moon had mounted high and higher in the vaulted dome of blue that canopied the silent valley of the Nile. The hoopoe birds had fled in flocks to take their wonted places in the branches of the sycamore and fig. All nature slept. A sea of golden sand rolled off beyond the westward. The mountains of the east lay slumbering upon their couch of burnished gold. The rippling river flung the sleeping moonbeams back so prodigal they fell upon its bosom.

The Widow Ditzdagh lay upon her rug beside the open window of her chamber, looking out upon the rich and dazzling scenery of the night. All nature slept, save Widow Ditzdagh.
"I will do it," she said at last; "I will do it."
The round, red sun peeped shyly from behind the rugged mountains of the east. The silver of the night was gone, and in its place rich gold was strewn. The sunbeams kissed the dangling figs and woke the hoopoe birds; then rumbled away to ride upon the laughing waters of the valley gold, and glinted gleams in wantonness of brilliancy.

The Widow Ditzdagh called her charming daughter.
"Muzhera," said she, "I have decided." "Which way, ma?"
"I will take a roomer."
"Which room, ma?"
"The one back of the lumber in the attic, dear. So, come, let us arrange."
The shortening of the shadow of the tannery risked the coming of the moonlight. The sunbeams rolled and rolled his ball down the slope and then upon the slant. The corn field sought the shade. It was better than tannery.
"Furnished rooms?"
"That was all the planed said."
"Why, ma," queried Muzhera, "why do you drag the piano from its wonted corner?"
"I would place it by the window, child, so that the sunbeams may note its presence. Do you watch over?"
"I got your drift, ma, and I approve your urgency."
"Hush, child! I have but just begun. Fetch me your chair. No, not that; one with the broken back, nor yet the cheap one with the flattered bottom. This one, my child; this one of brocade velvet. See, it looks well, though its remaining three uneven legs are not the legs of use and practice."

There was the furniture bedstowed. Then all the things were drawn down to suit away the sunbeams. It was not the golden sunshine Widow Ditzdagh would invite. Nay, not all the sun was shut away.
"That will do, dear. You may leave that blind and let the golden rays fall full upon the chair and the piano, that my guest may be beguiled within by the richness of our belongings."
Here is a good place to end the first chapter. By this time the reader's interest is aroused. He wonders what will take the piano to the window, and what will take the broken chair to the window. He sees a chance for all sorts of dramatic situations when the roomer comes, and as for "cloud coloring," that is in a fair way to make a novel worthy of a nine-days' run if he takes it up where we have laid it down, but follows out the plot set forth for him.—Washington Post.

Not to Be Outdone.
The agriculturist, as everybody knows, does not like to admit that anybody can grow anything that he cannot. A city person asked a farmer out in the country a while ago if he had new potatoes on his table, and the farmer shook his head.
"But we," said the city person, "have had new potatoes for the last three weeks."
"Huh!" said the farmer, without a blush. "I might 'a' had 'em a month ago if I'd known they was as big as they was; but I bet you got 'em last week without diggin' 'em, and then, when I went to get 'em, I'll be goshawmed if they wasn't too big!"—Boston Transcript.

Economy Crushed.
Jack Borrowitt—There's no use in trying to economize, Tom. The money is bound to go one way or another.
Wiggins—Why, what's the matter now?
Jack Borrowitt—Why, I've been walking home every night for a month to save my car fare, and now Mrs. Pankake has raised my board on account of increased appetit—Lila.

None Required.
"Let's you and I play mind reading," said the first little girl as they stood at the gate.
"Oh, no," replied the second.
"But why?"
"Because mamma doesn't want me to, and besides I know all what is going on anyhow. You've got a new bird girl—your mother is having an old dress made over—your sister's beau has gone back on her, and your father stayed out all night the other night."—Detroit Press Press.

One They Could Hear.
At Mrs. De Fashion's Musicale: Guest—Mercy! What are all these washboilers and flatirons and things in the parlor for?
Mrs. De Fashion (helplessly)—I had to get them. The leader of the orchestra came here at the last minute and refused to play unless I furnished those things for the music chairs. He said he was bound to have one selection heard above the conversation.—Boston Traveller.

YOUNG FOLKS COLUMN.
ENTERTAINMENT FOR OUR GIRL BOY READERS.
General Directions to Young Swimmers.
Rules to Be Observed in Sea Bathing.
How to Manage the Waves—A Little Boy's Composition on the Frog.

The best way to enter the water is to submerge one's self entirely so that the whole body and head may be immersed at once, for this prevents the upward rush of the blood that causes the disagreeable headache and giddiness for which the young learner often does not know how to account. After swimming in fresh water dry yourself well before resuming your clothes. A little gentle exercise after the bath is useful. Do not bathe, especially in ponds, after storms and heavy rains. The middle of the day, when the hot sun darts down its rays perpendicularly on the water, is not a favorable time for a swim; if you can, bathe at a regular hour every day, either in the morning, or in the afternoon or evening, when the sun is declining; but never after a full meal. The water is warmer in the evening than in the morning. This is important to be remembered by those who are subject to cramp, or who suffer from cold. Do not remain too long in the water; in general, half an hour is sufficient. Running streams and rivers are better for bathing and swimming purposes than ponds and pools thickly overshadowed by trees. Choose for your swimming ground a place with a sandy or pebbly bottom.

AT THE SEASIDE.
When a person becomes a good swimmer, he gradually dispenses with set rules. But a few simple rules easily remembered and easily applied. The following are given for this purpose: 1. Slow and steady. 2. Back of head on shoulders. 3. Spine well hollowed. 4. Take breath between the strokes. Those who have been accustomed to fresh water do not always know how to manage the waves when they first try sea bathing. The force of waves is often sufficient to take a man fairly off his feet and throw him at full length into the water. Therefore he can recover his footing, he is caught by another wave, and again rolled over. Several instances have been known where a person has thus been drowned in shallow water. Now there is but little difficulty in getting the better of a wave, if one only knows how to do it. Carefully watch the advancing wave, and if it does not reach above the level of the eyes, leap upward as it begins to hit. Thus the wave will pass under the feet, and go on its way harmless. If, on the contrary, the wave comes up to the chest and neck, like a mountain of water, stoop down, leaning forward to the wave, and let it pass over. These directions are for one who cannot swim.

A Matter of Taste.
Says the paper of the 10th inst.:
"Who's your tailor tell me, pray;
For, good sir, he's cut your outfit
In a most old-fashioned way.
Look at me!
Would you see?
What a stylish suit should be!"
Says the rabbit to the peacock:
"Who's your tailor tell me, pray;
For his shawl has shorn your ears, sir,
In a most old-fashioned way.
Look at me!
Would you see?
What a stylish suit should be!"
—St. Nicholas.

A small boy in Vick's Magazine expresses himself as follows about the frog:
The frog is an amiable animal, that is he can live in the water or out on land, just as he likes mind to, but mostly the latter; he has four legs—two short ones and two long ones; he has no tail because his back legs are so long he don't need one. He can jump as you all know, and is very playful he also eats flies when the fly isn't fly enough to fly away! There are various kinds of Frogs, there is the green frog and the Bull frog—him what sings, & the two frog with little suckers on his feet instead of shoes and which he uses for to climb with, and lots of others that you don't know nothing about, so I'll stop here for fear you think this is too froggy to be true.

Israel Putnam and His Plow.
Following is a revised story of Israel Putnam and his plow, as told in a recent issue of Wide Awake:
The old story books made us believe that on April 30, 1775, Israel Putnam was plowing in his field, when a messenger arrived in hot haste with news of the battle of Lexington, and that the hero farmer unyoked his oxen and left them to their fate, mounted a horse and was off to the north without so much as saying "Good by" to those of his household. And were not we brought up in the belief that this line,
They left the plowshare in the mold, was inspired especially by his case? And have not we, all of us, ever since our childhood been familiar with pictures representing him plowing, clad in a frock as long as a nightgown, which no farmer could wear at any kind of work without imminent and unescapable peril of being tripped up at every step he took, to say nothing of turning a furrow, when he would be indeed fortunate if he did not find himself under the plowshare?

And to know after many years that there was no plow in the case—to find out that that, too, is a myth!

It was, indeed, the day after the fight at Lexington, in the morning; and Israel Putnam was at work on his farm in Pomfret, Conn. But he was building a stone wall, with his hired men, and he was not to be troubled by the news of the battle. He was a short one; fancy one of that material coming to his heels! He took off the apron, but did not wait to change the check shirt he had worn in the field, and was off without delay. He rode the same horse 100 miles in eighteen hours and reached Cambridge at sunrise the next morning.

THE CURIOSITY SHOP.
How the Speed of Sound Varies in Different Objects.

As a general rule, the greater the density of a substance and the more elasticity it possesses, the more perfect is its conductivity of sound; thus it has been found that while sound travels at the rate of 1,135 feet per second in the ordinary atmosphere, it will travel 4,708 feet per second in water. This was proved by experiments in the Lake of Geneva. The traveling power of sound through solid substances may be stated generally to be more rapid than through either air or water. The metals, on account of their elasticity, naturally stand at the head of the list. The French philosopher Blot, by means of the empty water pipes of Paris, proved that sound will travel through iron at the rate of 16,822 feet per second, or about fifteen times faster than through air. It has been proved that if a bell be struck in a vacuum in an air pump, no sound whatever can be heard, and that if hydrogen be introduced the sound is hardly perceptible. In fact, hydrogen, which is the most rarefied of all gases, is the worst conductor of sound, while iron, the densest, is the best. This latter is very scarce, and consequently difficult to experiment with, so gold and platinum, which are among the densest of bodies, are commonly called the best conductors of sound.

Dakota's Wells.
The artesian wells of Dakota are, perhaps, the most remarkable examples of their kind which have ever been opened, both as regards the pressure and the volume of the escaping water. More than 100 wells, from 500 to 1,000 feet deep, are at present in successful operation in the district north of Yankton, and they yield a constant stream of water, which is apparently never affected by any of the surrounding influences. The pressure of the water is abnormally high in many instances, and up to 150 pounds per square inch has been registered by gauges. The power is utilized in the more important towns for water supply for protection from fire and for driving machinery, and a very considerable saving is effected by the adoption of hydraulic apparatus in place of the steam engine. In the town of Yankton, for instance, there is a very large turbine which operates a low mill by day and an electric light plant by night, and it is driven entirely by water obtained in this manner.

They Stop Circulation.
Tight collars, besides being extremely uncomfortable while worn, are injurious in other ways. Professor Dr. Forster, director of the University Ophthalmic Clinic at Breslau, Germany, has drawn the attention of parents and pedagogues to what he believes is often the cause of nearsightedness in the young—namely, that they are allowed to wear collars that are too tight for them. In 300 cases that had come under his notice the patients suffering from chronic nearsightedness brought on by a disturbance in the regular and normal flow of blood caused by the wearing of collars which were not large enough. It is now understood that many puzzling headaches are due to overstraining the eyes and defective vision. In such cases a skillful oculist may give permanent relief by removing the cause of straining, or providing glasses to remedy the defect of sight.

"What's a Fog?"
In an interesting letter to Science, H. A. Hazen, of Washington, gives some interesting and valuable particulars respecting the properties and nature of fog. He says that it is admitted that fog is simply cloud composed of water dust or solid minute spheres of water from 1,000 to 14,000 of a inch in diameter. Many have supposed that each particle must be the nucleus for each sphere, but an examination under the microscope of evaporated fog has proved that such is not the case. Briefly stated, the cause of fog is as follows: It is essential that there be no wind. The sky must be clear. The air must be saturated or nearly so. The formation of fog is a purely mechanical process, unaccompanied with heat.

Price Ring Terms.
It has been said, whence the origin of the custom in prize fights of throwing the hat into the ring? What is the origin of the custom of "throwing up the sponge?"
An authority on manners and customs says that the first instance of throwing the hat occurred when Pollux threw Cestor in the ring. Coming down to historic times, it is probable that the hat is the prize fighter's substitute for the ancient knightly gauntlet—the gauge of battle. The sponge, during the fight, is used to refresh the fighter; it is a conspicuous object, always at hand, and throwing it up signifies that the fighter has no further use for it.

Color Blindness.
In a paper read before the Kansas Academy of Science at Leavenworth the following interesting statements were made: About four out of every hundred males are more or less deficient in color sense. Of females reported as examined in Europe and America 2 per cent. were color blind.
Most cases of color blindness are found to be congenital, and are incurable. Many have been produced by disease, some by violent convulsions in accidents, and some by excessive use of tobacco and alcohol.

Colors of the Roman Gods.
The gods of the Romans each had a color by which he might be designated. They were as follows: Saturn, black or very dark blue; Jupiter, lustrous gray or bright scarlet; Apollo is represented as of a deep gold color; Mars is always red, but with more of a brownish tinge than Jupiter's color; Venus' color is reddish; and Mercury is represented as a light blue.

A Corinthian Yacht Club.
A Corinthian yacht club is one where the members sail their own yachts; a Corinthian race is one in which each contesting yacht is sailed by its owner. The name is derived from the Grecian city of Corinth, which was the first city to possess war galleys. Why the owner who sails his own yacht should be called a Corinthian doesn't follow very plainly.

To a "T."
There is a common expression, "It suits to a T," that is a very old one. The T square, or rule, is an instrument used by mechanics when great exactness is required. When anything is exactly right, "it suits to a T." That is, it is correct in every way, as a piece of work would be if measured by the T rule.

A Name for a Big Yarn.
A "roorback" is a term applied to a fictitious story, particularly to a campaign tale. The term is taken from the name of Baron Roorback, who published tales of adventure early in this century. The baron's name thus became a synonym for any large story.

An O.N. Term.
Santa Fe, N. M., is the oldest city in the Union. There was an Indian pueblo there in 1541, when the Spaniards came. The Church of San Miguel, organized in 1540, is the oldest in the United States. Its present building was erected in 1710.

—The fire engine was used all forenoon in filling the emptied cisterns with water out of Goose Creek. This, by the way is one good thing that comes of Goose Creek. Those remarks call to mind the suggestion that a hitching rail over the main cistern at the Court House corner is very much out of place. This fact will be verified some day when an approach is impeded by numerous teams hitched there.

—Leonay, the Egyptian Juggler, with Al. G. Field & Co's Minstrels, although but twenty-eight years of age, has seen more of this world than usually falls to the lot of man. He landed at San Francisco on July 1st, 1889, and joined Al. G. Field & Co's Minstrels for a tour of America.

—It is said that one of our good, pious citizens, who howled pretty loud over a recent impersonal paragraph in the STAR, was caught recently dilling a car of wheat, which he had sold to one of our elevator men, with spoiled and wet grain in the bottom and covering it over with good wheat. The deception was exposed and a settlement made. Of course the intent may not have been fraudulent, but the same thing occurred with the aforesaid good, pious citizen once before, and it looks bad. It looks very bad.

—Bucyrus Telegraph: The city council has for some time been negotiating to bore for gas on the John Kerr farm, eight miles south of Bucyrus, adjoining the gas well that is now burning there. It has also leased the Stephen Kerr farm and other property around there, and the second city well will be bored in this section. Some weeks ago the council examined the Kerr well, which although it contains forty feet of water, when hit the blaze extends ten or twelve feet. The well is only 113 feet deep and is about ninety feet in diameter.

—C. H. V. and T. Vard Accident.

Another accident, which came near resulting in the death of Dan Evans, occurred at the C. H. V. and T. yards this morning about 9 o'clock. Evans is employed as switchman in the yards and was assisting in moving some cars, a number of which had been placed on a side track, but which did not clear the main line, and as a car was being pushed in the direction of the ones that did not clear the main line he took a pole and placed it in such a position that the oncoming car would push the others clear. The pole slipped from its position, striking Evans and throwing him with much force against the moving car.

He suffered a bad cut in the head by the fall and was bruised considerably about the shoulders, with perhaps internal injuries. He was removed to his home, and Dr. Sweeney was called. The result of his injuries cannot as yet be determined.

The Teachers' Institute.

The annual institute of the teachers of Marion county ended with a very interesting session this afternoon. The continued attendance this year has not been equal to the attendance on the previous two years, yet the enrollment has exceeded even that of last year, when a two weeks' session was held, and the interest and intellectual profit of this session is the greatest that has ever been observed.

In their various branches Professors Darst and Eversole have been especially instructive, and their lectures in the evening have been very meritorious and entertaining.

This interesting teachers' week will end Saturday with a large county examination.

For Saturday.

At Lotze's east Center street market you will find pork, lamb, veal, mutton, beef, bologna, sausage, pudding, and all else desirable in the meat market.
